Pressure Rating Not Available For Ferrules

Hello

At OV, we are a supplier to many original equipment manufacturer (OEM) companies who resell our ferrules for various applications. Unfortunately, we do not have specific information available regarding a maximum pressure rating for our ferrules. This is a question we receive a few times a year, and we want to explain why we cannot provide a definitive answer.

The primary reason for not setting a maximum pressure limit on our ferrules is the extensive variety of sizes and types we offer. With so many different sizes of ferrules and the multitude of tubing types they can be used with, establishing a universally applicable pressure rating would be a complex, expensive, and potentially liability-laden endeavor. It would require rigorous testing of the ferrules with each tubing type, which can vary significantly in terms of material, thickness, and other factors. This complexity makes it impractical for us to guarantee a specific pressure rating that would be universally accurate for all situations.

In such cases, determining the maximum pressure limit for a particular application should be done by the end user, taking into consideration the specific tubing and environmental factors involved. Conducting your own testing or referring to relevant industry standards can help ensure that the ferrules perform safely and effectively in your specific setup. Please reach out if you have any further questions or need guidance on how to approach this process.

We hope this explanation clarifies our stance on maximum pressure limits for our ferrules, and we are here to assist you with any other inquiries or support you may need. Thank you for your understanding and for considering our products for your applications.

Best Regards,
